Calling all canine lovers... We're taking you downtown to see an art museum exhibit devoted completely to DOGS! Robb Putnam is an Oakland artist who constructs masterful representations of our best friend using "orphaned" materials – bits of old blankets, rags, plastic bags, thread, and so on. That's how they came up with the title of this exhibit: "Orphans".

Afterwards, we'll visit a nearby bakery to indulge in a cream-puff!

For those of you who like a little light exercise every so often, here is an interesting option to explore. We're planning to meet at the Strybing Arboretum in Golden Gate Park for a docent-led walking tour of the Botanical Gardens. The terrain at the Arboretum is relatively smooth and mostly flat, so it won't be very strenuous at all – just the level of activity you probably have in mind. After the walk, we'll peek inside the library for a look at the nature-themed watercolors on exhibit.
